Terms of Participation:

Roommate profiles will be kept on file through the end of the assignment process. Participating in the Digital Media Arts College roommate finder service is completely voluntary and it will be the responsibility of all students using this service to contact the Housing Coordinator to become informed of any potential roommates. Be advised that all student participant profiles will become available to other students searching for roommates upon their submission and those potential roommates may contact you to discuss your living compatibility. Students who are assigned by Digital Media Arts College housing service and who accept a roommate from the pool of roommate choices must stay with the chosen roommate for one semester, minimum.

While we do hope that the service will be beneficial, Digital Media Arts College (DMAC) is not accountable for any roommate matches that do not turn out to be successful. If your roommate(s) vacate(s) the residence during the course of the semester, DMAC is not liable for the expenses incurred; however, students may request a new roommate for the beginning of the following semester. In addition, please be aware that the Housing Coordinator is not to be contacted for the apartments' contract/leasing information. Student renters need to speak directly with the desired apartment's management for all information regarding the residence. DMAC is not liable for apartment damages; we merely provide a roommate finder service. Digital Media Arts College does not have a contractual agreement with the rental facilities and bears no liability or responsibility for them. DMAC is not a contracted party in the agreements between students and rental facilities. Digital Media Arts College acts solely as roommate finder service to students. Lists of residences provided to students are only meant as a reference of potential housing, and should in no way be construed as a recommendation of them over and above any other housing available to students attending DMAC.

I have read, understand, and agree to the terms of participation stated above.
